The third island of Borromean Gulf, named "dei Pescatori" (Fishermen Island), after its age-old fishing community, or "Isola Superiore" (Upper Island), because of its more northerly situation than the other islands in the Gulf, is the most picturesque of the Borromean Islands, as well as the only one to be permanently inhabited (about 50 islanders). A little over 1200 feet in length and 335 feet wide, this small island offers a fascinating simplicity. Its characteristic old village is celebrated for its well-preserved architecture and old-fashioned characteristics, such as narrow, winding streets, geranium laced balconies, multi-storey houses with long balconies used to dry fish and the Church of San Vittore, whose pointed bell tower rises above the red roofs of the houses.

Vendors in stalls and small shops cover this island, as do plenty of restaurants where you can eat freshly caught fish
